Second Week of the August China Sale

Few people perhaps stop to think when looking at a handsome Dinner Set how much labor is involved in the manufacture of it.

The several baking processes before and after the decorations are put on, the skill used in these decorations and the care necessary in every part of the work is costly not only in time but money, and the wonder is that a Limoge Dinner Set of 102 pieces, such as we price is the "King Charles" at have for $27.50, can be sold at that $10.00. There's 100 pieces, decowith pink borders and others blue flowers with pink borders.

Another set of Limoge of the same quality is $23.50. Decorated in blue and pink flowers, but not quite as elaborately as the first named set.

Both sets are stippled in gold. A beautiful Dinner Set at a low rated in blue.

Pretty Dinner Sets of 49 pieces in English China, for $4.95.. China Salad Bowls, $1.00. All good values and assorted patterns.

Mrs. Chiles Mason Ferrall, who was a member of the Tuggle house party at Virginia Beach, is at home again.

Mrs. D. T. Williams is enjoying August with a congenial circle of freeds at the Greenbrier White Sulphur.

Miss Evelyn Gordon is the guest of friends near Charlottesville, Va.

Madame and Miss Guillaume are spend-ing the summer on the New England coast.

Mrs. Robt. H. Fisher, the Misses Fisher and Mrs. Hall, who have been summering in Massachusetts, will come to Gaymout, near Staunton, during the latter part of August.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred. Boott have been giving one of the most delightful house parties of the summer at their country home, "Royal Orchard," near Afton, Va.

The hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Stevens has thrown wide its doors for its accustomed series of midsummer house parties. A number of Richmond young people will be among the number of Mr. and Mrs. Stevens' guests.

Three things about the "Jessica Letters" to come out in the Critic, beginning with the October number, especially please the publishers.

First, it is a story of to-day treating of contemporary American experience.

Secondly, the boo kis well written, with a marked literary finish. The author has the knack of choosing precisely the right word or expression for describing crucial scenes and situations. The letter form in which this work is presented is well carried out, and the feminine and masculine traits are cleverly revealed in the different letters.

Thirdly, and of the first importance, this is above all a love story. The situations are delightfully romantic and the book contains some of the prettiest love-making that has appeared in years. The ending of the story is artistic with all the characters happy and no riddles lett to puzzle the reader.

So everybody will it.a "Jessi' as Letters." They are published anonymously, but their author is said to be a prominent Southern girl, and curiosity is on tiptee concerning the book which is to be brought out by the G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Personal Mention.

The excursion to start August 20th, under the chaperogage of Ziss Betty Ellyson and for the benefit of the Retreat for the Sick, is arousing great interest, Many are booked for the trip, which will include a three-days' visit to Niagara, the most charming of American resorts, two days spent in Toronto, Canada, and a day at one of the most picturesque spots in America, the far-famed Watkins Glen.

Every arrangement for the comfort and pleasure of those traveling with her, will be made by Miss Ellyson, who will be glad to furnish all additional information to those who desire it. The very mode-rate sum of $9 will cover the cost of the entire trip, Mrs. Helen G. Manson will leave Wednesday to spend several weeks at the Mecklenburg Hotel, Chase City.

Mrs. R. T. Hunter and Miss Elizabeth S. Hunter returned to Richmond yesterday afternoon from the Jefferson Park Hotel, near Charlottesville, Va., where they have spent ten days very pleasantly.

Mrs. Philip Flippen and her mother, Mrs. Brown, of Culpeper, spent a part of yesterday in Richmond, returning to Cumberland Courthouse last afternoon.

Miss Preston Womack is back in Richmond, after spending two weeks delightfully at Virginia Beach.

Mr. Robert Lynn is spending some weeks at his former home, in Franklin county, Va.

A dance in honor of the Misses Capps, Norfolk, Va., who are visiting their other, Mr. Bernard Capps, will be given its evening in Northside Hall, by the lisses Kidwell.

Much interest is felt in Richmond over a tournament which will be siven at Buckroe Beach August 25th. The tournament will conclude with a steeple-chase, for which a number of entries have been made. A number of Richmond peo-made. A number of Rachmond peomuch pleasure. A delightful Eastern Shore house party has just come to an end. The party was has just come to an end. The party was given at "Bush Hill Farm," the home of Captain Tankard Ames, in Northampton county. Miss Sarah Ashby, who was the hostess and the promoter of great enjoyment to her guests, is said to be one of the most charming girls in the Old Dominion.

RELATING TO DIVORCES

Effort Made by Judge Saunders to Ge a Uniform Law Passed by Virginia Legislature-Mr. Pollard Member from Richmond.

The Commissioners for the Promotion Uniform Legislation in the United States will assemble at Hot Springs, Va. August 24th and 25th. The conference is emposed of commissioners appoined in pursuance of statutes by the Governors of the various States.

Governor Montague has appointed Judge A. A. Phlegar, Judge R. T. Barton and Hon. John Garland Pollard as commissioners from Virginia. Under the law these commissioners are directed to examine the subjects of marriage and divorce insolvency, form of notarial certificates. descent and distribution of property, acknowledgment of deeds, execution and probate of wills and other subjects upon which uniformity is desirable, and to asertain the best means to effect uniform-

The conference has now been in existonce for about eleven years, during which time it has accomplished a great work. Hon. James Alston Cabell, who was a long time chairman of the Vir-ginia commission; Judge E. W. Saunders and the late Hon. W. P. McRae, of Peand the late Hon. W. P. McRue, of Petersburg, have for some years represented Virginia. They succeeded in having passed in Virginia what is known as the negotiable instruments act, which is now in force in more than twenty of the

They also made an effort to secure the passage by the Virginia Legislature of the uniform divorce bill, which is designed to prevent the many abuses which has sprung up on account of the diversity of laws. The conference is seeking to have all of the States provide that no divorce shall be granted for any cause arising prior to the residence of the complainant or defendant in the State in which the suit is brought, which was not the ground for divorce in the State where the cause arose. Such a law would put a stop to the practice of moving from one State to another for the purpose of obtaining a divorce. UNIFORM DIVORCE LAW.

Miss Margaret Lee, with her charming purty of young ladies, Miss Margaret Shields, Miss Mary Buford and Miss Lily Urquhart, will return to Richmond about September 15th. Their European trip so far has been delightful.

The conference is also seeking to have a uniform acknowledgment to deeds, so that a notary in one State in taking an acknowledgment for a deed to property in another State will not have to concern himself with reference to the peculiar laws of the State in which the property is located.

is located.

The statutes which the conference recommend are all drawn by experts and are thoroughly studied and discussed before being recommended. The subject for consideration at the meeting at Hot Springs will be uniform statute on the subject of sales, which statute was drawn by Professor Samuel Williston, of Harvard University.

The services on Sunday at the Methodist Episcopal Church were very largely attended, the pastor, Rev. J. F. Cuthriell, preaching at both services. CHAPTER XXI.

Three weeks of watching, care, and waiting, had brought the color back to the cheeks of Kate Mediague, the brightness to her eyes. She had a strong and vigorous constitution, and once fairly upon the road to recovery, she made rapid strides,

From Minnie Burton she had heard Kate Mental Burton she had heard all that he has done to you, I hope, Minnie, she said.

"You do not love him any more after all that he has done to you, I hope, Minnie, she said.

"Love him, Miss Kaie! I hate him, and if I have the chance I'll kill him, she added with snapping eyes.

Kate knew that, morally speaking, she should lecture the girl, and tell her to harbor such feelings was unchristian and among its peoples had made her able to sympathize with them, and she was a half native herself. Had she been treated as poor, ignorant Minnie Burton had been, she was not at all sure that she would not feel quite as revengeful as she did.

The next day she was taken on board the steamer and after a grateful fatewell to the little dector, who absolutely refused to accept anything but thanks, and who stood on the quary waving his broad panama as they rowed sway, a handshake and a blessing from the kind old priest who was willing to take a generous donation for the poor of his parish, the steamer's prow was once more pointed seamer and after a grateful fatewell to the little dector, who absolutely refused to accept anything but thanks, and who stood on the quary waving his broad panama as they rowed sway, a handshake and a blessing from the kind old priest who was willing to take a generous donation for the poor of his parish, the steamer's prow was once more pointed seamer and after a grateful fatewell to the little decided to accept anything but thanks, and who stood on the quary waving his broad panama as they rowed sway, a handshake and a blessing from the kind old priest who was once more pointed seamer and after a grateful fatewell to be kind of the real part of the tend of the fateward of the fateward of the fateward of the

All nature smiled to Falph Jennings, for was not the only woman of his life heside him, and was not every day bringing her nearer and nearer to his arms? He could wait he longer to know his fate, his feelings could no longer be held in leash as he sat he side his fair charge, the calm see before them, the heavens above.

"Kate, darling?" he said in a low voice full of emotion, as he leaned over her, "do you think that you have made up your mind? Can I ask you now if you will have me, dearest."

The warm color rose to her cheeks, but she turned his great eyes bravely to his, with a look in her face that there was no mistaking.

mistaking.

"Ralph, dear," she said, "I knew that I loved you when Alian Cunningham tore we away from the de la Touches. As I lay upon the schooner's deck, as I walted in the negro but at Fort de Flance, I knew that I loved you I am yours, dear, yours now and forever."

There was not a soul near to see the passionate embrace that followed these words, and little they recked of the outside world at that moment. The words which bound their lives together had been spoken; that was enough.

which bound their lives together had been spoken; that was enough,
"Ralph, dear," she said later, "what became of Allan Cunningham?"
"I do not rightly know, Kate. We saw him start for his schooner the day that I found you. The police reported that she had all sails set and got away before they could reach her. As she ran by this steamer Cunningham shook his fist at the captain, so he told me, and shouted out that he would meet him again."

"What kind of a vessel has he? While I was on her I was too agitated to no-tice anything, and I know little about such matters at the best."

"I do not know myself. I shall have to ask the skipper," and he called to that functionary, who stood scanning the horizon with his glasses. "Capitain, what kind of a vessel is that upon which Cunningham escaped?"

"One of the fastest in the islands, sir."
"And what kind of a man is it that owns her?"

'One of the worst in the business. not even to the corner, in fact."

"Surely, you do not give him a high character. What is he? What is high business?" asked Ralph, as he seated sallor to another chair. "Sit down, cap-tain; you might as well take it easy as out, you might as well take it easy as not. Have a cigar?"

"Thank ye, sir. Well, I'll tell you how it is in regard to Jim Green and his schooner. Her name is the Mongoose, and she is well named, for I think she and she is well named, for I time size takes everything in sight or out of sight, for that matter, and without making any fuss or blow about it, either. Several vessells have never arrived at their destinations in this part of the world, and yet no one has been able to lay their hands upon the cause. It has not been hurricanes or anything of that sort, but just plain disappearance. In one case a man

"What did they do with the crew of he vessel?" 'In his case the captain was killed by the shot that carried away the steering gear. The mates were put to sea in an open boat without food or water, and the crew was divided, part going in the open boat without food or water, and the crew was divided, part going in the schooner and the others being turned adrift in a small boat. He was one of the latter. They knocked about for a couple of days, with nothing to eat or drink, and then a storm came up and capsized the little craft. The other two capsized the little craft. The other two could not swim, so they drowned, but he managed to crawl up onto the overturned boat, and was picked up the next day by the Royal Mail. That is the nearest that we have to a description of what has happened, but owing to what he tells of the leader of the band, and he size of the schoner, we suspect our the size of the schooner, we suspect friend Green. I may do him an injus but I think that he is a scamp of nings.

"Meaning Cunningham, sir?"
"Yes, that is what I mean."
"True for you. He is one of the biggest rascals for a gentleman born that I ever heard of."
"I have good reason to know that,"
said Ralph, "and so has Miss Montague."

"And so has Minnie, the brown girl, heard before I left Kingston," said the

That would be quite as well, for should not greawy from him, I fear, especially if he caught us unawares, the thing will be the death of the captain.

few that this Green, or Cunningham, whichever commands the schooner, knows that we have left the harbor. It takes thee or four days to run across, and it cannot be possible that he should be able to catch us. That is all nonsense!"
"Nothing is nonsense where Allan Cunningham is concerned," replied Kate.
"You do not know him if you think that has no information concerning us if he ningham is concorned," replied Kate.
"You do not know him if you think that he has no information concerning us if he wants it. I have no doubt but that he could get it if he tried. No, no, I shall not feel safe until we are in Kingston harbor. Then I shall breathe easily."

The sun, a blood-red ball, was just sinking below the horizon, and just beyond that horizon, her jibs to windward, right where she had been for the last three weeks, simply salling back and forth so that there should be no chance of escape, was the schooner Mongoose.

Cunningham meant to recapture his game beyond all peradventure this time. He could wait. And he did!

CHAPTER XXII.

"Great heavens, what is that?" and before he was aware of what had happened, Raiph was flung from his bunk cnio the floor of his cabin. For a moment he was completely dazed, and then he heard some one rush by his door and a voice yelled:

"A collision! All hands on deck!"

He jumped into a pair of trousers and made a dash for the deck. As he came up the companionway he was selzed by a pair of strong arms, but managed to shake himself fred.

"Knock him on the head, boys!" he heard some one cry, and the voice sounded strangely familiar.

"Knock him on the head, boys!" he heard some one cry, and the voice sounded strangely familiar.

Three men were upon him in an instant, but for a few minutes he fought them off. The struggle was brief, however, for as he backed away he tripped over a prostrate body, and then all was a blank.

"There! He is out of the way," growled Cunningham, for it was he who had given the order to kack Jennings over. "Are there any more?"

"No; I think we have the whole outfit except the woman. Here they come. Hush!"

Minnie, who came up directly after her, was also captured, but the struggle was more protracted. The brown girl was tall and pewerful, not in the least exhausted by disease as was Kate, and full of fight as a bantam.

"Who is you people dat you diff 'tack my missus an' me?" she yelled at the top of her voice. Suddenly the light struck on the face of a man standing noar by and giving directions.

"My God!" cried the woman, and then her voice dropped away and she became mute, her arms fell to her sides and she suffered herself to be led after Kate, like a lamb to the slaughter.

The two women were taken below decks on the schooner and the crew returned for further orders,

"What is next?" asked one of them, a great red-haired brute, strongly pockmocked, which, however, was no injury to his beauty.

"For the very last place that they will expect us to-right away back home."

"What! With these two women?"

"We'll only go back there for a starter. That will throw any one off the scent if they start out to find where these follows have gone to. After we have laid low for a while we will get out and sail for some of the southern islands, well out of the way, and not much visited,"

"She's started" cried one of the men, coming aft from the forecastle.
"Let us get out of here quick, then, There is a good breeze and we can make a long leg and a short one. Good-bye, my friend," he said, shaking his fist at Raiph's recumbent figure. "I've done the business for you this time. You will not bother me again."

"Sister, what are the "Socot, brother, scoot!"
And that's what we had to do. We were standing on the board walk where standing on the board walk enjoying the music of Moses Stein's orchestra and talking to Eddie Bowen and Gus at the same time, while the breeza from afar down the magnificent York River blew our hair from under our hat, as we tried to catch a smile from the pretty blue-eyed girl, when Dutch Learnan same up and told us the train was petting ready to be hauled back to Richmond.

If Hermar Notic and R. M. Picher wind only pass us down and back again, tike they did once.

If there is one thing more than another we love, it is a whiff of pure sait air, and, where can we get it to better advantage than upon this very board walk where we are now writing, with the dense shade, the sweet strains of music to the motion of Stein's bow, with the soft delight that accompanies the wave from Chesapeake Bay, as they push each other up the York River against the pillows of the board walk and the bath houses.

Or words to that effect.

And then there was Pat O'Reilly, who can tell more good things in the same space of time than Billy Van; and Geo, Yeager, of Murphy's Hotel staff, when we left at the dear in Baltimore, after we had had a piece of milk and a glass of pie and got real glidy.

Boach Park is not like Asbury Park or Coney Island, where it costs you to open your mouth to breather. You can do a where it costs you to open your mouth to breather with twenty-five cents can have a big time and still have can fare left when he gots back.

To us a firm spent at Beach Park is as the A.M. to go off with our uncle to his farm in tile Berkshire Hills, there to daily with nature in all her glory, with that comes to the kid with nothing on his mind but two solid months of vacation before going back to school and betch.

It is to us now like a glance from the betch teves of her with whom we used to
